Brother, I’m Dying

by Edwidge Danticat
Preface

Indicates interviews with the author and experts on this book. Internet access is required for this content.

Edwidge Danticat’s Brother, I’m Dying tells the true story of the author’s uncle and father as they work to build a future for themselves and their families—one brother in Haiti and the other in America. When the book opens, the author is a grown woman living in Miami, and she learns, over the course of a single day, that her father is dying and that she is pregnant with her first child. Just weeks later, her beloved Uncle Joseph seeks asylum in the United States and experiences brutal treatment. Told through Danticat’s singular voice, these events set the stage for a powerful tale of loss and remembrance.

Table of Contents

About the Book .................................................. 3
About the Author .................................................. 5
Historical and Literary Context .............................. 6
Other Works/Adaptations ......................................... 8
Discussion Questions ............................................. 9
Additional Resources ............................................. 11
Credits ..................................................................... 12

“‘It's not easy to start over in a new place,’ he said. ‘Exile is not for everyone. Someone has to stay behind, to receive the letters and greet family members when they come back.’”

What is the NEA Big Read?

A program of the National Endowment for the Arts, NEA Big Read broadens our understanding of our world, our communities, and ourselves through the joy of sharing a good book. Managed by Arts Midwest, this initiative offers grants to support innovative community reading programs designed around a single book.

A great book combines enrichment with enchantment. It awakens our imagination and enlarges our humanity. It can offer harrowing insights that somehow console and comfort us. Whether you’re a regular reader already or making up for lost time, thank you for joining the NEA Big Read.
About the Book

Introduction to the Book

Brother, I'm Dying, is the true-life story of Edwidge Danticat’s father, Mira, and his brother, Joseph. Born in the Haitian countryside, both brothers move to the big city of Port-au-Prince to work and raise families. Many years later, after Edwidge’s father marries and begins a family, he decides to immigrate to the United States, while her Uncle Joseph—a community leader and pastor—chooses to remain in Haiti with his congregation. Edwidge, only two years old at the time of her father’s departure, is left in the care of her Uncle Joseph and his wife, Tante Denise. Joseph and Edwidge develop a close relationship over the next several years. Edwidge spends most of her free time with her uncle, and after he suffers severe damage to his vocal chords, she acts as his interpreter. Ten years later, Edwidge rejoins her parents in the U.S. and must adjust to an unfamiliar world in Brooklyn, where she struggles to balance her new life with memories of the vibrant home and beloved uncle she left behind in Haiti.

Now grown and living in Miami, Edwidge faces the impending death of her father and the birth of her first child. Meanwhile, political unrest and violence in Port-au-Prince heighten due to government and gang disputes, and Edwidge fears for the safety of her Uncle Joseph and his family. Fleeing for their lives, Uncle Joseph and his son Maxo seek safety in America and come face to face with the complications of the U.S. immigration system. Over the next 72 hours, Danticat’s world is forever changed as her father’s condition worsens and her uncle’s whereabouts are unknown.

Additional Reading

- The Washington Post reviews Brother, I'm Dying, focusing on the challenges of U.S. immigration and the tensions inherent in being torn between two countries and two families.

Major Characters in the Book

Faidherbe "Fedo" Boyer
Husband of Edwidge and father to their daughter, Mira.

Edwidge Danticat
Author of Brother, I'm Dying and the eldest child of Mira and Rose Danticat.

André "Mira" Danticat
Edwidge’s father and a dedicated family man, Mira works in a factory and drives a gypsy cab to sponsor the immigration of his wife and two eldest children.

Maxo Dantica
The son of Joseph and Denise, Maxo spends time in the United States for college but later returns to Haiti. Maxo joins his father in the attempt to flee Haiti after a surge of political violence in Port-au-Prince.

Bob, Karl, and Kelly Danticat
Edwidge’s three younger brothers. Karl and Kelly were born in New York City while Bob, like Edwidge, was born in Port-au-Prince.
Joseph Dantica

Edwidge's uncle and Mira's brother, Joseph abandons political dreams to become a pastor, opening a church and school.

Tante Denise

Wife to Joseph, Denise is a stern but dedicated guardian of the many children in her care and is known as a skilled seamstress and the best cook in the Bel Air neighborhood.

Granmè Melina

Illness and old age bring Granmè Melina and her folktale traditions from her village in Léogâne to the home of her daughter, Tante Denise.

Marie Micheline

Abandoned by her father, Marie grows up as the adored role model of the younger members of the Danticat household and spends her life in Port-au-Prince working in various medical clinics.

Tante Zì

Doting and playful sister of Mira and Joseph, Tante Zì is a resident of Port-au-Prince and owner of a stationery stand. Tante Zì assists Maxo and Joseph when they are threatened by neighborhood violence.
Edwidge Danticat (b. 1969)

Edwidge Danticat was born in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, where she lived with her aunt and uncle until she joined her parents in New York City at age 12. Her parents, Rose and Mira, left Haiti for work and safety in the United States when Danticat was a toddler. Growing up, Danticat was shy, and though teased in her Brooklyn high school for her accent and lack of English, she was proud of her heritage.

Danticat grew up in a rich storytelling tradition and loved writing and reading from an early age.

Danticat published her first novel, Breath, Eyes, Memory in 1994. She had just graduated from Brown University with a master’s degree in creative writing, after completing her undergraduate studies in French literature at Barnard College. Only one year later, Danticat's first collection of stories, Krik? Krak!, was shortlisted for the National Book Award.

For several years, Danticat co-produced documentaries for Hollywood director Jonathan Demme and worked as an associate producer on the films Courage and Pain (1996) and The Agronomist (2003)—both about Haiti. During this period, Danticat began to think seriously about a career as an author, though her parents considered writing somewhat impractical. Having spent most of their lives under dictatorships, they also were concerned about Danticat writing openly of Haiti.

In addition to writing and making films, Danticat was a visiting professor of creative writing at New York University (1996-1997) and the University of Miami (2000-2008). Meanwhile, her writing career continued to evolve steadily alongside her other endeavors. Danticat has published numerous novels and several works of creative nonfiction, including her memoir, Brother, I'm Dying, which won the 2007 National Book Critics Circle Award for Autobiography.

In 2009, Danticat received a MacArthur Fellowship (nicknamed the "genius grant") and her literary career took a new direction with a collection of essays on art and exile, Create Dangerously: The Immigrant Artist at Work (2011). Part personal anecdote and part historical narrative, this book focuses on the creative work of individuals who bear witness to violence, oppression, and poverty.

Danticat has often been called upon as an informal diplomat and advocate for Haiti. In 2000, she moved to Miami with her husband and their two daughters, only a 90-minute flight from Port-au-Prince.

Additional Reading/Viewing

- MacArthur Fellowship profile on Edwidge Danticat—includes a short video introduction to the author and her work.
  http://www.macfound.org/fellows/49/

- The New York Times profile on Edwidge Danticat—features the latest news coverage on the author as well as archived essays by and about Danticat.

- Zocalo Public Square discussion with Edwidge Danticat—a short video segment featuring a discussion on immigrant art.
  https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=k5c84vfuFYE

---

About the Author

Edwidge Danticat (Photo by Jonathan Demme)
Historical and Literary Context

Haiti’s History and the Life and Times of Edwidge Danticat

15th Century–20th Century

- 1492: Columbus lands on the modern-day island of Haiti, claiming it for Spain.
- 1697: Spain cedes the western part of Hispaniola (Haiti) to France.
- 1804: Haiti wins its independence from France through a slave revolt led by Toussaint Louverture.
- 1915: U.S. occupation of Haiti begins as an attempt to maintain political and economic stability after presidential assassination. Occupation lasts nearly 20 years.
- 1920s: Harlem Renaissance celebrates black culture and identity in Harlem and beyond.
- 1954: "Papa Doc" François Duvalier declares himself "President for Life."

1960s

- 1969: Edwidge Danticat is born in Port-au-Prince.

1970s

- 1971: "Papa Doc" dies of natural causes and is replaced by his son, "Baby Doc" Jean-Claude Duvalier.
- 1971: Mira Danticat immigrates to the United States
- 1973: Rose Danticat joins her husband in New York City.

1980s

- 1981: Edwidge Danticat moves to Brooklyn to live with her parents and three brothers.
- 1986: "Baby Doc" Jean-Claude Duvalier's constitution is annulled and his rule is illegitimatized. Haitian immigration to the United States increases.

1990s

- 1990: Edwidge Danticat graduates from Barnard College.
- 1990: Jean-Bertrand Aristide elected president of Haiti.
- 1991: Aristide flees Haiti after a coup led by Brigadier General Raoul Cedras.
- 1992: U.S. Coast Guard rescues more than 40,000 Haitians at sea as they attempt to escape a worsening economy and political unrest.
- 1993: Edwidge Danticat graduates from Brown University with an MFA in creative writing.
- 1994: Breath, Eyes, Memory published.
- 1995: Aristide restored as president, with support from U.S. troops.

2000s

- 2002: Aristide's government orchestrates attacks on civilian opposition using police and government supported gangs called "chimères."
- 2004: Breath, Eyes, Memory published.
- 2004: Armed rebellion leads to the forced resignation and exile of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to South Africa.
- 2004: Maxo and Joseph Dantica flee violence and political unrest in Haiti, traveling to Miami.
- 2005: Mira, daughter of Edwidge and Fedo, born.
- 2007: Brother, I'm Dying published.

2010s

- 2010: Earthquake of magnitude 7.0 hits Haiti, killing 300,000 people.
A Brief Overview of Haiti's History and Culture

Located in the West Indies, Haiti (the French spelling of Ayiti, the native Taino name meaning "mountainous country") shares the island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic and is roughly the size of the state of Maryland. A revolution led by slaves gained Haiti's independence from France in 1804, making it the world's first independent black republic. Haiti's official languages are French and Haitian Creole, and roughly 95% of the population is of African descent—almost all indigenous peoples were lost to disease and brutal labor practices at the hands of Spanish colonizers.

Despite influence from Spanish and French settlers, Haitian culture remains distinct and vibrant, reflecting many elements of West African traditions. Rara festival music, twoubadou guitar ballads, and merengue-style compas music exemplify traditional Haitian sounds. Haitian visual art includes intricate flag making to decorate places of worship, landscape painting, and sculptures that feature recycled and natural materials. Artwork from Haiti is bought and sold internationally and several major galleries in the United States and Europe have hosted exhibits of Haitian painting. Dance in Haiti is both a social and ritual activity—featured in Vodou ceremonies and carnival celebrations. Traditional quadrille or karabela dresses, worn by women on formal occasions such as weddings or religious holidays, are celebrated for their bright colors and full, flowing skirts. Haitian cuisine is based on Creole and French cooking styles. Beans and rice are staples of the Haitian diet and are usually flavored with coconut and hot peppers.

Haiti has given birth to several internationally celebrated authors such as Jean Price-Mars, whose works were translated from the French by Langston Hughes. The country was once home to abolitionist Frederick Douglass as well as to Zora Neale Hurston, who wrote Their Eyes Were Watching God while living there. Today, Haitian culture continues to influence artists of all disciplines, including the pioneering choreography of Katherine Dunham and the watercolors of American painter Lois Mailou Jones. Though Haiti is often associated with political unrest and economic troubles, it is a country of great beauty and cultural richness, reflected in its landscape and its peoples.

Jean-Bertrnad Aristide

Jean-Bertrand Aristide is a controversial political figure in Haiti's history, and he appears often throughout Brother, I'm Dying. Aristide was an outspoken critic of "Papa Doc" and "Baby Doc" Duvalier, and was Haiti's first democratically appointed president. He was first elected in 1990 and served as Haiti's President three different times: for eight months in 1991, from 1994 to 1996, and from 2001 to 2004. His presidential terms were abruptly ended by violent overthrows. A man with contentious policies, Aristide survived four assassination attempts, including one by the powerful Tonton Macoutes, which is referenced in Brother, I'm Dying. At the end of his final presidency in 2004, Aristide was forced into exile in South Africa, not returning to his home country of Haiti until 2011.
Other Works/Adaptations

Danticat and Her Other Works

In addition to Brother, I'm Dying, Edwidge Danticat has written several novels, young adult fiction, a collection of short stories, a children's book, and several essays for The New Yorker and The New York Times, among many other publications. Danticat's writing—whether fiction or nonfiction—is united by its dedication to Haitian peoples and culture, drawing heavily on her own experience as an American immigrant from Haiti.

At age 25, Danticat wrote her first book, Breath, Eyes, Memory, which chronicles four generations of Haitian women struggling to understand each other in the context of one violent act. Danticat's second book Krik? Krak! was a finalist for the 1995 National Book Award. A series of stories focused on the difficulty of everyday life under a dictatorship, Krik? Krak! reflects the Haitian tradition of passing stories down orally from one generation to the next. Her third novel, The Dew Breaker, explores the lives of Haitian dissidents who suffered under a torturer transformed into a quiet man living in New York City with his wife and children. After publishing The Dew Breaker, Danticat became a key figure in the national and international literary scene, representing Haiti and the immigrant journey.

Danticat's latest work of nonfiction, Create Dangerously: The Immigrant Artist at Work, examines the challenges of creating art after exile. A combination of memoir and essays, Create Dangerously wrestles with the complex responsibilities of artists who represent countries burdened by trauma and great loss. In 2013, she published her first work of fiction in nearly ten years, Claire of the Sea Light, which was named a New York Times Book Review and Washington Post Notable Book of the Year.

Additional Reading/Listening

- Wild River Review interviews Edwidge Danticat about Haitian folklore and the importance of telling and retelling stories from one's homeland.

- The Rumpus discusses Edwidge Danticat's writing life and her many publications.

- The Atlantic discusses Edwidge Danticat's belief that "all immigrants are artists."

Selected Articles by Edwidge Danticat

- "A Year and a Day," The New Yorker, 2011

  http://www.newyorker.com/magazine/2008/06/09/crabs

Selected Works by Edwidge Danticat

- Claire of the Sea Light, 2013
- Create Dangerously: The Immigrant Artist at Work, 2011
- The Dew Breaker, 2004
- Behind the Mountains, 2002
- The Farming of Bones, 1998
- Krik? Krak!, 1995
- Breath, Eyes, Memory, 1994
Discussion Questions

1. Danticat tells us that she has constructed the story from the "borrowed recollections of family members....What I learned from my father and uncle, I learned out of sequence and in fragments. This is an attempt at cohesiveness, and at re-creating a few wondrous and terrible months when their lives and mine intersected in startling ways, forcing me to look forward and back at the same time." Discuss what this work of reconstruction and reordering means for the structure of the story she presents, as well as for her own understanding of what happened to the two brothers.

2. Consider the scene in which Danticat sees the results of her pregnancy test. How do her fears for her father affect her first thoughts of her child? She says to herself, "My father is dying and I'm pregnant." How does this knowledge change her sense of time? How does it affect her understanding of the course of her family's history?

3. As a child, Danticat was disturbed at how little her father said in the letters he sent to the family in Haiti. He later told her, "I was no writer....What I wanted to tell you and your brother was too big for any piece of paper and a small envelope." Why, as a child, did she "used to dream of smuggling him words"?

4. How does young Edwidge retain her loyalties to her parents, even though they are absent from her life for so many years? Is there evidence that she feels hurt or rejected by their decision to leave for the States? How does she feel when they come back to visit Haiti with two new children?

5. Haiti's history is briefly sketched on in the chapter entitled "Brother, I'm Dying" and elsewhere. While many readers will know that Haiti was a slave colony, why is the fact of the American invasion and nineteen-year occupation less well known? Danticat's paternal grandfather, Granpè Nozial, fought with the guerrilla resistance against the Americans. How does the family's engagement with Haiti's political history affect Joseph's unwillingness to emigrate to the U.S.? Why does he refuse to leave Haiti, or even to remove himself from the dangers of Bel Air?

6. If so few words are passed between Danticat's parents and their two children in Haiti, how is emotion transmitted? Is there a sense, in the book, that Danticat is emotionally reticent even after her reunion with her parents? Why is she reluctant to tell her parents the news about her pregnancy? Why is it important that her father gave her a typewriter as a welcoming present?

7. Danticat found a scrap of paper on which she had written, soon after coming to Brooklyn, "My father's cab is named for wanderers, drifters, nomads. It's called a gypsy cab." What does this suggest about how she understood, or thought about, her father's work and her family's status in America? What does it reveal about a young girl's interest in the power of words?

8. Brother, I'm Dying is Danticat's first major work of nonfiction. What resemblances does it bear, if any, to her works of fiction in terms of style, voice, content, etc.?

9. Danticat says of her story, "I am writing this only because they can't." As a girl, Edwidge was often literally her uncle's voice, because after his tracheotomy she could read his lips and tell others what he was saying. Why is it important that she also speak for her father and her uncle in writing this memoir?

10. Consider the relationship between the two brothers, Mira and Joseph. There is a significant difference in age, and Mira has been away from his brother for decades, by the end of the story. Despite this, they remain close. What assumptions about kinship and family ties are displayed in their love for each other? Are these bonds similar to, or stronger than, ties you would see between American-born brothers?

11. When Danticat describes the death of her cousin, Marie-Micheline, or her uncle's list of the bodies he has seen on the street, or when she recounts the story of the men laughing as they kick around a human head, or the threat of the gangs to decapitate her uncle Joseph, or the looting and burning of his home and his church, what is your response as a reader? How does this violence resonate against the warmth and love that are so clearly expressed by the feeling of Danticat's extended family members for each other?

12. How does Danticat convey a sense of the richness of Haitian culture? What are the people like? What are their folk tales like? How does their use of both Creole and French affect their approach to language and speech? How does she make us feel the effects of the violence and poverty that the Haitians endure?
13. Danticat's description of what happens to her uncle in U.S. custody is reconstructed from documents. How does Danticat control her emotion while presenting these events? How, in general, would you describe her writing style as she narrates these often devastating events?

14. Danticat relates her Granmè Melina's story about the girl who wanted the old woman to bring her father back from the land of the dead: what is the effect of her decision to end the book with this story? How does the story reflect on the book as a whole, and on the act of writing?

15. As one reviewer put it, "If there's such a thing as a warmhearted tragedy, Brother, I'm Dying is a stunning example" (Yvonne Zipp, The Christian Science Monitor). Do you agree? If so, what elements in the writing and the story contribute to this effect?

Brother, I'm Dying discussion questions provided courtesy of Vintage Books, a division of Penguin Random House, LLC.
Additional Resources

Websites

- Earthquake of 2010
  Includes information on the 7.0 magnitude earthquake that killed 300,000 people in 2010.
  http://www.britannica.com/event/Haiti-earthquake-of-2010

- Encyclopedia Britannica profile for Vodou
  Includes a short description of this religious tradition as it originated in Haiti. Examples of Haitian Dropo (ceremonial flags) used in Vodou practice.
  http://www.britannica.com/topic/Vodou

- Food in Every Country: Haiti
  Includes several recipes for traditional Haitian dishes.
  http://www.foodbycountry.com/Germany-to-Japan/Haiti.html

- Haitian Folk Music database
  Includes information on rara, twoubadou, and merengue.
  http://www.haitianmusic.net/haitian-folk-music/

- Haitian Revolution
  PBS documentary chronicling the leaders and political climate in France and Haiti during the Haitian revolution of 1791-1804.
  http://video.pbs.org/video/2110323964/

- Julio Jean performing with his Afro-Haitian dance students.
  The dance is called "Dessalines" in reference to Jean-Jacques Dessalines, a leader of the Haitian Revolution and the first ruler of an independent Haiti. Jean works at Cumbe: Center for African Diaspora Dance.
  https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_BPviefH6Z8 http://www.cumbedance.com/teachers/julio-jean/

- National Geographic Haiti Guide
  Includes photos, maps, statistics, and articles on Haiti’s economy, geography, and culture.

- Radio Haiti
  An archive of political speeches and Haitian music from Jean Dominique’s famous radio station in Port-au-Prince.
  http://radiohaitilives.com/

- Smithsonian Folkways: Sounds of Haiti
  A playlist of diverse musical styles from Haiti, including festival music, sacred drumming, and guitar ballads.
  http://www.folkways.si.edu/sounds-of-haiti/music/playlist/smithsonian

- U.S. Invasion and Occupation of Haiti
  An overview of the U.S. invasion and occupation of Haiti from 1915-1934.
  https://history.state.gov/milestones/1914-1920/haiti

Books about Haitian History and Culture:

- Évelyne Trouillot's The Infamous Rosalie, 2013
- Paul Farmer's Haiti After the Earthquake, 2012
- Madison Smartt Bell's All Souls' Rising: A Novel of Haiti, 2004
- Tracy Kidder's Mountains Beyond Mountains, 2004
- Diane Wolkstein's The Magic Orange Tree and Other Haitian Folktales, 1997

Books Similar to Brother, I'm Dying:

- Chimamanda Adichie's Americanah, 2013
- Anne Fadiman's The Spirit Catches You and You Fall Down, 2012
- Daniel Mason's A Far Country, 2008
- Junot Díaz's The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao, 2008
- Dave Eggers's What Is the What, 2007
- Jamaica Kincaid's My Brother, 1998
Acknowledgments

Audio contributors:

Julia Alvarez was born in New York City, but her family moved back to the Dominican Republic when she was only three months old. In 1960 authorities discovered that Alvarez's father belonged to an underground effort to overthrow the brutal dictator Rafael Trujillo, so the Alvarezes fled back to the United States. Educated at Middlebury College and Syracuse University, Alvarez spent many years teaching around the United States until the success of her first novel, How the García Girls Lost Their Accents (1991), allowed her to pursue writing full-time. Perhaps best known for her work of historical fiction In the Time of the Butterflies (1994), her recent publications include Return to Sender (2009) and A Wedding in Haiti (2012).

Laurent Dubois is the Marcello Lotti Professor of Romance Studies and History and the founder and Faculty Director of the Forum for Scholars & Publics at Duke University. From 2010 to 2013, he was the co-director of the Haiti Laboratory of the Franklin Humanities Institute. Dubois is the author of five books including Avengers of the New World: The Story of the Haitian Revolution (2004), A Colony of Citizens: Revolution and Slave Emancipation in the French Caribbean, 1787-1804 (2004), and most recently, Haiti: The Aftershocks of History (2012). Dubois also writes about the politics of soccer, with Soccer Empire: The World Cup and the Future of France (2010) and is the founding editor of the Soccer Politics Blog.

Writers: Literature Staff, National Endowment for the Arts

Cover image: "Coat of Arms Haiti" by Lokal_Profil and Myriam Thyes, via Wikimedia Commons.